

I am a "forced" Openband customer that would like to have the same opportunity to choose my phone, internet and subscription television service like most other Americans. When we moved to the area some 5 years ago the telecom/broadband landscape was much different than it is now. Arrangements like the one that Openband has with the Broadlands community are not in the consumer's best interest. There should be competition from various providers for these services that should ultimately provide benefit to the consumer by reducing cost and giving more and better options.

Thank you,

Jeff Johnson